

Video Invitational. We invite authors, publishers and readers to submit links to YouTube videos or videos on other platforms or to submit videos that we can post on our YouTube channel in lieu of the opportunity for personal interaction that Alaska Book Week normally allows for. We can also link to podcasts if you don't want to go the video route. Videos and podcasts would be posted shortly after we receive them and be available during Book Week. If we can archive them on the Alaska Book Week website please let us know. We are also including videos from the UAA/Anchorage Daily News Creative Writing Contest.

These videos can be about your own publication, or they can refer to other Alaska writers' books. Our intentions are to stir up interest in books about Alaska or by Alaska authors. So we encourage you to talk about books that are by Alaska authors, or refer to Alaska subjects, or take place in Alaska.

All this, of course, will happen within the limits of our all-volunteer staffs' technical and time constraints.

While you no doubt have plenty to say about your book keep in mind best practices for this type of video viewing or listening. A 4-or-5 minute video or podcast is much more likely to be viewed than a 30-minute video.

We will vet the videos to make sure they are appropriate. All videos must adhere to YouTube's Community Guidelines.

To participate, email a link to your video or podcast to akbookweek@gmail.com. You can also mail us a thumb drive or CD to this address:

Alaska Book Week
c/o Trish Jenkins
4722 Mills Drive
Anchorage, AK 99508